

Racelogic win two Queen's Awards for Enterprise

Racelogic announced as double winner in the Queen's Awards for Enterprise, with both Innovation and International Trade awards.

Announced on Saturday 21st April, to mark Her Majesty's birthday, the 2012 Queen's Awards for Enterprise listings contained 209 companies, with Racelogic being one of only four to be honoured with the award for both Innovation and International Trade.

Racelogic won the Innovation award for their advances in GPS/GLONASS test simulation, with customers such as Broadcom, ST-Ericsson and Telefonica using LabSat to test their devices.

Almost 90% of Racelogic's sales are now to countries other than the UK, and they are delighted to have customers in 92 countries around the world. They were therefore very pleased to receive the International Trade Award to recognise this achievement.

Racelogic's CEO, Graham Mackie, said: "We are extremely proud to be named as a winner of these two awards, with many highly reputable companies in the UK competing for these honours."

"As a company we continue to grow and now employ over 50 people in the UK alone. We have distributors located all over the world who help us to market and sell our systems to a wide variety of markets and customers."

Racelogic is a company which strives to deliver innovative solutions to the Automotive and Electronic sector, with the design and manufacture of systems to measure, record and simulate data from moving vehicles.

All winners will be invited to collect their awards at a reception hosted by the Queen in Buckingham Palace later this year.
